Dear Bruce,

I can hardly believe that commencement is now upon us and Cameron has not only endured the rigors of four undergrad years at MIT, but he's been endeared to his experience at the institute. Bruce, you have been a principal contributor not only to his success, but to his happiness there.

The institute and nuclear science was Cameron's first choice since he was in middle school, and it was a long hard road that brought this kid from a graduating high school class of 25 to the mecca of science and engineering that is MIT.

There are three academically related entities that are responsible for Cam's achievements. The school's many gifted and dedicated professors, the local brothers and the national leadership team of his Sigma Nu Fraternity, and not the least among these, the Gordon Engineering Leadership Program, an organization that has poured itself into Cameron, mentoring him, guiding him, advising him, and challenging him to excel and become the leader we have always recognized him to be.

Cam has been on the receiving end of a profound wealth of knowledge and encouragement, the very intentional product of the GEL program and people like you. As a dad watching from the sidelines, cheering him on, it has been very reassuring to receive regular text messages, emails and phone calls expounding on the mission and the mastery of the GEL leadership development team. What you have imparted into Cam and the program's other young men and women is crucial to the success of the many entrepreneurs, business leaders and problem solvers you have nurtured.

We will remain indebted to you for your influence, personal care, friendship and enthusiasm. Your heart for the next generation is immediately and abundantly obvious, and I thank you for it.

I am so excited for what Cameron has ahead of him. Bruce, I very much appreciate all you've done and will undoubtedly continue to do.

Gratefully,

André
